

Julián Melgosa

The Three-legged Stool

I grew up in the inner city of Madrid, Spain. Only occasionally could my family take me to experience the blessings of nature available in the country. I must have been five years old when I first saw a real cow, which seemed much larger than I had imagined based on pictures and toys. Next to the cow in the pen, I distinctly remember seeing a three-legged milking stool. Someone explained that this tripod stool provided the necessary balance to milk the cow, regardless of the irregularity of the terrain. Later, in school, I learned that three points determine a plane (as long as they are non-collinear), which explained the suitability of that unique chair design. Furthermore, the three-legged milking stool could suffer from imperfections, such as one leg being slightly longer or shorter than the others, and still provide reasonable stability.

How fascinating, it seemed to me, that one could sit stably on a three-legged chair, yet all the chairs I knew about had four legs! Years later, I observed that many principles, theories, or ideologies were founded upon three elements. And this leads me to the point of this editorial: Christian education has been built upon three pillars: the home, the local church, and the school, each representing one leg of the stool.

The first—and often the most important—source of learning is the home, the family. It is the place where children learn their primary language and the basics of social interactions, where they first have an opportunity to receive and give love and affection. Soon they are introduced to the church congregation, typically years before they enter formal schooling. The local church is a great source of religious/spiritual knowledge. It provides a setting to learn about the love and saving power of Jesus presented in an attractive way to children in Sabbath school, in clubs such as Adventurers and Pathfinders, as well as in special services for children and opportunities to serve the community. These provide opportunities for positive interactions with peers from the earliest stages of development and often go beyond the Sabbath day, as many friendships develop in the church setting. Last, children go to school and learn the necessary knowledge and skills to adjust to their particular culture and society. There, students can follow sophisticated curricula and experience a replica of the greater social world that will prepare them for life.

The Seventh-day Adventist Church has a long and firm tradition of education. Abundant counsel from an inspired source has been given from its early history about the influence of home, church, and school and how these three sources influence student development:

- “In His wisdom the Lord has decreed that the family shall be the greatest of all educational agencies. It is in the home that the education of the child is to begin. Here is his first school. Here, with his parents as instructors, he is to learn the lessons that are to guide him throughout life—lessons of respect, obedience, reverence, self-control.”¹

- “God has appointed the church as a watchman, to have a jealous care over the youth and children, and as a sentinel to see the approach of the enemy and give warning of danger.”²

- “Wherever there are a few Sabbathkeepers, the parents should unite in providing a place for a day school where their children and youth can be instructed. They should employ a Christian teacher, who, as a consecrated missionary, shall educate the children in such a way as to lead them to become missionaries.”³

Ellen G. White received inspiration to put in writing hundreds if not thousands of pages of advice to develop Christian education, knowing that given the complexity of each institution—family, school, and local church—intentional effort must be put into nurturing and supporting interaction and a harmonious relationship among them.

For this reason, I like the metaphor of the three-legged stool. A child may come from a dysfunctional family, but school and church may compensate for that deficiency. Or he or she may attend a church that lacks a loving atmosphere, but the local school and family may provide sufficient nourishment. Or a school may struggle to fulfill its responsibilities, but the church and the family might step in and provide the resources necessary to build up the school. The metaphor allows for variations in the home, the church, and the school while seeking to maintain a stable educational experience.

Undoubtedly, God has appointed multiple sources to enhance learning and education and ensure that the good news of salvation through Jesus reaches every child. I have known adults who had had a mediocre church and school experience but flourished mentally, physically, and spiritually because of a strong family influence. Others have been judged and mistreated by their local church, and a caring family and school have compensated for the negative influences. As educators, we have a sacred responsibility to strengthen the leg of the stool for which we are responsible in our schools, classrooms, and interactions with the home and church. The ultimate goal, however, is to produce a stool with three robust and unwavering legs so that students have the best opportunities to grow in connection with God and their fellow human beings.

Continued on page 44

Guest Editorial Continued from page 3

In conclusion, parents, pastors, teachers, and students must work faithfully and in a coordinated manner to support children's spiritual, mental, physical, and social growth. Only in eternity will we find out how many souls of young people have been saved by the intervention of home, church, and school.

Julián Melgosa, PhD, is Associate Director of Education for the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists in Silver Spring, Maryland, U.S.A. He serves as Liaison for Higher Education and Advisor for the North American Division, the South American Division, the Northern Asia-Pacific Division, the Trans-European Division, and the Middle East and North Africa Union Mission. Dr. Melgosa also serves as the Chair of The Journal of Adventist Education Advisory Board.

Recommended citation:

Julián Melgosa, "The Three-legged Stool," The Journal of Adventist Education 85:1 (2023): 3, 44. <https://doi.org/10.55668/TSUR7544>.

NOTES AND REFERENCES

1. Ellen G. White, Counsels to Parents, Teachers, and Students (Mountain View, Calif.: Pacific Press, 1913), 107.
2. Ibid., 165.
3. Ibid., 174.

The World Education Team 2022-2025

Lisa M. Beardsley-Hardy, PhD, MPH, MBA, Director

- Board Chair for the Accrediting Association of Seventh-day Adventist Schools, Colleges, and Universities (AAA)
- Liaison for schools of medicine, dentistry, and pharmacy
- Liaison for the Middle East and North Africa Union Mission and the Northern Asia-Pacific Division

Hudson E. Kibuuka, DEd, Associate Director

- Liaison for higher education and advisor to the Southern Africa-Indian Ocean Division, the Southern Asia-Pacific Division, and the West-Central Africa Division
- Executive Secretary for the AAA
- Editor, College and University Dialogue

Julián Melgosa, PhD, Associate Director

- Liaison for higher education and advisor to the North American Division, the South American Division, the Trans-European Division, and the Middle East and North Africa Union Mission
- Chair, The Journal of Adventist Education® Advisory Board

Sócrates Quispe, PhD, Associate Director

- Liaison for higher education and advisor to the Inter-American Division, the Euro-Asia Division, and the Inter-European Division.
- Associate Editor, The Journal of Adventist Education® (International Editions)

Richard A. Sabuin, PhD, Associate Director

- Liaison for higher education and advisor to the East-Central Africa Division, the South Pacific Division, the Southern Asia Division, the China Union Mission, and the Ukraine Union Conference
- Editor, College and University Dialogue

Faith-Ann A. McGarrell, PhD

- Editor, The Journal of Adventist Education®

Chandra Goff, BA

- Editorial Assistant, The Journal of Adventist Education®

Gabriela de Sousa Matias, MEd

- Joint Managing Editor, College and University Dialogue

Chawngdinpui Schaffer, PhD

- Joint Managing Editor, College and University Dialogue

Esther Hoche Rodriguez, MEd

- Office Manager, Department of Education

Rachel Kim, BA

- Records Secretary for AAA, International Board of Education (IBE), and International Board of Ministerial and Theological Training (IBMTE)

World Directors of Education

Divisions

ECD	Andrew Mutero, PhD	SSD	Bienvenido Mergal, PhD
ESD	Roman Chisacov, MA	SUD	Edison Samraj, PhD
EUD	Marius Munteanu, PhD	SPD	Malcolm Coulson, PhD
IAD	Faye Patterson, PhD	TED	Kayle de Waal, PhD
NAD	Arne Nielsen, PhD	WAD	Juvenal Balisasa, PhD
NSD	Edgard Luz, MS
SAD	Antonio Marcos da Silva	Unions
	Alves, MBA, PhD	CHUM	Mark Mak, PhD
SID	Felix Njini, DMin	MENAUM	Jeanette Bryson, PhD